

Long Beach Local News Internship Opportunities

Long Beach Local News has multiple internship opportunities. Interns will receive hands-on training in broadcast journalism, writing, and video production, depending on the nature of the internship. There will be opportunities to report news in the field and in the studio, write articles for our website, conduct interviews, and do behind-the-scenes work that will impact the community. We offer a hands-on experience that provides students with a full understanding of what it takes to report the news. Interns should have experience in journalism and/or public relations. All class levels are welcome. Internships are unpaid but we will sign off for college credit. Possibility of part-time employment will be available after the internship is complete.

Description of organization: Long Beach Local News is an award-winning news outlet with 2 million views a month across all our platforms. We are a local, grassroots organization that works to inform the public on all issues that are relevant to Long Beach's diverse community.

Students that are interested can send a cover letter and resume to longbeachlocalnews@gmail.com