

Alex Lohman is an assistant coach with the California State University, Long Beach (CSULB) Moot Court program. She is a lecturer of Constitutional Law at CSULB, and serves as the Associate Director for the Office for the Prevention of Harassment and Discrimination at UC San Diego.

With her partner Tim Appelbaum, Alex advanced to the sweet sixteen in the national AMCA tournament in 2011, and placed in the top ten for the written brief competition. She also placed fourth overall in the national orator competition. After her time at The Beach, Alex attended Northwestern Pritzker University School of Law, where she was a competitor and coach for its moot court program, the director of Chicago Youth Programs, and the managing editor of Northwestern Law's Journal of Law and Social Change.

Prior to making the switch to higher education, Alex was an attorney for youth in foster care where she successfully litigated trials and argued appeals in various jurisdictions. Alex has dedicated her legal practice to serving others and is extremely passionate about inspiring the next generation of public interest lawyers to serve our community and those in need. While working with CSULB mooters, Alex enjoys teaching others about legal research, legal writing, and how to apply those skills to oral advocacy. Alex's favorite cases include those that involve the Interstate Commerce Clause.
