

ψ Fall 2017 Colloquium

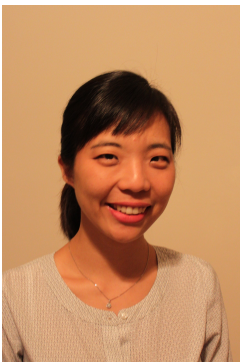

the Department of Psychology presents...

Empirically Based Approaches for Treating Suicidality in Adolescents

Kalina Babeva, Ph.D.

Associate Director/Postdoctoral Fellow/Clinical Instructor
Youth Stress and Mood Program
UCLA Semel Institute for Neuroscience & Human
Behavior

Sunhye (Sunny) Bai', Ph.D.

Postdoctoral Fellow/Clinical Instructor
Youth Stress and Mood Program
UCLA Semel Institute for Neuroscience & Human
Behavior

Abstract: Suicide is a major public health concern, and the second leading cause of death among adolescents in the US. Despite decades of research, progress in reducing suicide has been slow. We review the prevalence, correlates, and treatment of suicidality in adolescents. We present findings from several clinical studies aimed to better understand and reduce suicidal behaviors and non-suicidal self-injury, and describe current projects underway at the UCLA Youth Stress and Mood Program.

Wednesday, 11.8.17 3:30-4:30 PSY 155